第二部分 阅读理解(共两节,满分40分)

第一节 (共15小题;每小题2分,满分30分)

阅读下列短文,从每题所给的A、B、C和D四个选项中,选出最佳选项。

A

As the leaves start to change color and the autumn air turns fresh, sometimes nothing is more appealing than the attraction of a good book. Here are our four top picks for the best books.

The Most Fun We Ever Had

By Claire Lombardo

Doubleday

David and Marilyn have been married forever. Four kids and decades later, they're still as in love as the day they met. Lombardo paints an extraordinary picture of a family in what could well be one of the best novels published this year.

The Shadow King

By Maaza Mengiste

W. W. Norton & Company

A historical novel that takes place in the 1930s Ethiopia, The Shadow King focuses on the female soldiers who take up arms in World War II. In beautiful prose (叙述), Mengiste shines a light on those whose lives are not often noticed.

Someone We Know

By Shari Lapena

Pamela Dorman Books

A quiet suburban town is shaken by a series of break-ins and a body that turns up in the trunk of a car in this latest psychological thriller by the author of The Couple Next Door. How are the crimes related? And what does the invader know?

The Only Plane in the Sky

By Garrett M. Graff

Avid Reader Press

Journalist Graff puts together an oral history of 9/11 from the perspective of nearly everyone involved. Every single line is breathtaking and heartbreaking, weaving together the story of previously-unimaginable and tragic events that changed history.

21. Which of the following published the book about family life?
 A. Doubleday. B. W. W. Norton & Company.
 C. Pamela Dorman Books. D. Avid Reader Press.
22. Who is the author of a thriller?
 A. Claire Lombardo. B. Maaza Mengiste.
 C. Shari Lapena. D. Garrett M. Graff.
23. What is the book The Only Plane in the Sky about?
 A. An imaginary tragic story.
 B. A historical novel about soldiers.
 C. A journalist involved in 9/11 event.
 D. A collection of true stories in 9/11.

B

At the back of our house there was half a mu of vacant land. "It's a pity to let it go to waste like that," Mother said. "Since you are all so fond of peanuts, let us open it up and make it a peanut garden." At that my brother, sister and I were all delighted and so were the young housemaids. And then some went to buy seeds, some began to dig up the ground and others watered it and, in a couple of months, we had a harvest!

"Let us have a harvest festival tonight to celebrate," Mother suggested, "and ask Dad to join us for a taste of our fresh peanuts. What do you say?" We all agreed, of course. Mother cooked the peanuts in a variety of styles and told us to go to the garden for the celebration.

The weather was not very good that night but, to our great delight, even Father put in an appearance. "Do you like peanuts?" Father asked.

"Yes!" We all answered eagerly.

"But who can tell me what is good about peanuts?"

"They taste very delicious," my sister took the lead.

"They can be made into oil," my elder brother followed.

"They are inexpensive," I said. "Almost everyone can afford them and everyone enjoys eating them. I think that's what is good about peanuts."

"In fact there are quantities of good points of peanuts," Father said, "but one thing I do appreciate is particularly good about them. Unlike apples, peaches and pomegranates (石榴) that hang their bright and beautiful fruits up on the branches, attracting your admiration, peanuts lie buried in the soil, waiting until they are ripe before letting people dig them up. And you can't tell whether they bear fruits or not just by their fragile stems above ground."

We all agreed and Mother nodded her head, too. "So you should try to be like the peanuts," Father went on, "because they are neither grand nor beautiful, but useful." "That is what I expect of you all."

We stayed up late that night, eating all the peanuts Mother had cooked for us. But Father's words remained rooted in my mind till this day.

24. How many good points about peanuts are mentioned in this passage?
 A. 2. B. 3. C. 4. D. 5.
25. What did Father want his children to do in the future?
 A. To plant peanuts.
 B. To hold more celebration gatherings.
 C. To show off their abilities.
 D. To be useful instead of seeking fame.
26. How did Father tell the good quality about peanuts?
 A. By examples. B. By comparison. C. By statistics. D. By pictures.
27. What can be inferred from the passage?
 A. The family was too poor to afford other fruits.
 B. Father seldom joined them in such activities.
 C. Father didn't like eating apples or peaches.
 D. The peanuts are too shy to show their fruits.

Everyday wear like casual shirts, T-shirts, and jackets, embroidered (刺绣) with traditional patterns from the Yi ethnic group, staged a striking show at recent New York Fashion Week, which took place on September 4th. Chinese designer Wang Ta's new youth collection, decorated with Yi embroidery, a Chinese intangible cultural heritage, was a definite hit on the last night of the fashion week.

The audience was amazed by both the beautiful and mostly hand-embroidered colorful patterns and the perfect balance of modern and traditional elements. Leah Coulter, a student at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York, who dressed the models for the show, said the collection was a mix of old and new and loved all the patterns and embroidery, which aroused her interest in the unique handicraft dating back thousands of years. "I need to learn more about its history," Coulter said.

It's not something new in the fashion world to involve China's intangible cultural heritages as elements of design, Wang said, but it's not easy to make them into true fashion. "Intangible cultural heritages should not always be displayed in museums or only appear on souvenirs. I hope to break the stereotype through using the Yi embroidery and make them everyday, fashionable items," Wang told the media after the show. "I think fashion is the best way to introduce culture."

Wang's design ideas can be traced back to both her global experience as a fashion designer in Japan, the UK and China, and her unique educational background. Before receiving her second degree in fashion from Japan's top fashion institute Tokyo Mode Gakuen, she majored in history at East China Normal University in Shanghai.

In order to create her collection, Wang and her team went to Chuxiong Yi Autonomous Prefecture (自治州) in southwest China's Yunnan Province and deeply studied the culture and history of Yi's craftsmanship to gain insight into the essence, delicacy and symbolism of Yi embroidery. But Wang's employing the patterns, colors and techniques of Yi embroidery in her contemporary fashion designs is not a simple imitation. The combination of modern and traditional parts can't be too striking for it to be widely accepted as everyday wear, Wang said, adding that her goal is for people, regardless of gender, color or nationality, to like her designs.

28. What made Wang Ta's design appealing to the audience?
- The delicate hand-embroidered costumes in Yi culture.
 - The striking design of Chinese intangible cultural heritage.
 - The brilliant combination of traditional and modern parts.
 - The diversity of ethnic cultures displayed in the youth clothes.
29. What does the underlined word "stereotype" in Paragraph 3 mean?
- fixed impression
 - unique style
 - commercial trend
 - controversial type
30. Which of the following contributes to Wang's design ideas?
- Her fashion educational background only at home.
 - Her travelling experiences across ethnic regions in Yunnan Province.
 - Her working experiences in some European and Asian countries.
 - Her goal to be famous worldwide.
31. What is the most suitable title for the passage?
- Revive a Culture in Fashion
 - Apply China's Ethnic Elements in Fashion
 - Wang Ta — China's Talented Designer
 - China's Intangible Cultural Heritage

D

If you don't want people to know too much about you, then you had better keep your fridge contents secret, according to a British market research document released last week.

Researchers looked into the fridges of 400 people in Britain and compared the contents with the owners' lifestyles. They claim to be able to classify the nation's people by fridge contents.

They say those people can be separated into five categories: nutrition nerds (痴迷者), food-trend chasers (whatever is in style), strict mums, fast food fans and restaurant regulars.

Nutrition nerds care much about what they put into their bodies. Their fridges are stocked with fruit, vegetables and healthy meat. People in this category tend to be highly organized and usually work as lawyers or accountants. The vast majority is single, but if they have a partner, that person will be similar.

A fridge full of vitamins — enriched juices implies its owner works in media or fashion. They tend not to eat the foods they buy. Known as the food-trend chasers, they just want to be seen as purchasing the latest important things.

A fridge filled with everything from steak to frozen fish suggests the strict mum. Her fridge tends to be stocked with every kind of product, except what she herself would want. This fridge shows difficulty balancing family and work life.

Fast food fans always buy mineral water or soda pop. The nearest they will get to fresh fruit is tomato sauce. Their fridges show someone who works hard and plays hard, and someone who is not into long term planning.

Finally, a fridge filled with nothing more than a bottle of white wine and some sparkling mineral water implies an owner who is single, lives in a big city and enjoys the finer things in life. The fridge is empty because this person regularly eats in restaurants.

32. What did the researchers find out?
- Most people in Britain don't eat healthily.
 - People's characters can be reflected by their fridge contents.
 - People in Britain tend to eat out.
 - There are five types of people in the world.
33. What do we know about nutrition nerds?
- They rarely eat meat.
 - They care about food quality and expenses.
 - Their lives tend to be organized by lawyers or accountants.
 - They are mostly single.

34. What do we know about the five types of people?
- Nutrition nerds are always organized and successful in their jobs.
 - Food-trend chasers like to stock their fridges with tasty foods.
 - Strict mums care about others in family more than themselves.
 - Fast food fans usually stock their fridges with fresh fruit.
35. What will those who often eat out put in the fridge?
- Only something to drink.
 - Food rich in vitamins.
 - Fast food with tomato sauce.
 - Food from restaurants.

第二节 (共5小题;每小题2分,满分10分)

根据短文内容,从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Sleep to Lose Weight

A recent study found that people who sleep less tend to be fat. Experts said it's time to find out if more sleep can fight obesity (肥胖).

Nowadays, the most popular method to keep fit is doing more exercise and eating less. Some people even take weight-loss drugs to keep slim, which is unhealthy and harmful to your body. "36 As a result, we've failed to recognize the value of good sleep," said a physician (内科医师).

Men sleep an average of 27 minutes less than women, and overweight and fat patients sleep less than patients with normal weights. In general, fat people just sleep about 1.8 hours less a week than those with normal weights. 37 Only an extra 20 minutes of sleep per night contributes to a lower BODY MASS INDEX (身体质量指数).

We caution that this study does not establish a cause-and-effect relationship between limited sleep and fatness. 38 Therefore, let's stay thin by sleeping more!

Here are some other advantages of sleeping more.

● You'll learn better.

This isn't just for children. Adults who get enough sleep also do better on tests of short-term memory.

● 39

After getting enough sleep, you will find yourself feeling happy and delighted.

● Lower stress.

40 With that people can better control their blood pressure.

- Better mood.
- You will be energized.
- Sleep can definitely reduce levels of stress.
- We've put so much emphasis on diet and exercise.
- The study is intended to offer a healthy way to help people sleep longer.
- The experts suggest that too much extension of sleep time not be necessary.
- However, investigations of successful weight loss by sleeping more help prove such a connection.

My real hot potato is my addiction to my phone during my studies.

With notifications (通知) popping up every now and then, whether a Weibo "like" or a WeChat message or friend request, once I reach out for the phone, I can't help 41 through three photo albums, commenting on four statuses and watching two videos, which totally 42 my study schedule.

As a senior 3 student, who will take the National College Entrance Exam in less than seven months, I know this 43 will not take me to a 44 university.

Two months ago, in a bid to use the hours more 45, I joined a WeChat group that gathers together exam participants who are 46 by a similar problem.

Everyone is required to 47 their to-do lists in the morning and done-lists in the evening. If not, he or she has to send a red envelope of 100 yuan as a(n) 48. For a student who 49 1,000 yuan a month for living expenses, that's quite a sum.

I 50 my decision the night I joined the group because it's too 51 for me. During the first two weeks, only my strong unwillingness to pay out the money made me 52 my peers.

When I had an overwhelming 53 to watch some funny short videos in the middle of my study session, I would 54 myself by checking my bank balance.

Thanks to the supervision (监督), I 55 got used to the study routine. By organizing my to-do list the night before, I could hit the ground running with my roadmap when I went to the library in the morning.

Though we're not under the same roof, seeing my fellow examinees sharing their daily 56 is a real motivation to my own efficiency. Our growing familiarity means we also offer comfort and suggestions to anyone who runs into difficulties or emotional 57.

One of my roommates was very 58. He asked me how I 59 more self-discipline in my preparations for the exam, and once he learned the rules he became part of us.

I have saved my daily "accomplishment lists", and I believe they can become the 60 which will take me to my dream college.
